

HOMICIDE

50TH ANNIVERSARY

Presented by the AFI research library

In 1964 on October 20, the first episode of Australian crime drama Homicide was shown on television. Homicide, produced by Crawford Productions, holds a very special place in Australian television history as its success ushered in a new era of Australian drama television. Crawford Productions went on to become one of Australia's largest independent producers of television programs, with many of its cast and crew having long and prominent careers in the television and film industries.

To commemorate the 50th anniversary of the first Homicide episode, the School of Media and Communication and the AFI Research Collection is hosting a discussion panel followed by a Q & A on the legacy of Homicide and Crawford Productions.

Speakers:

Ian Crawford (Producer/Executive Producer), John Jacob (sound/Associate Producer/Director), Michael Harvey (writer), Leslie Dayman (an actor who played a detective 1966 -68), Professor Jock Given (Swinburne University), Andrew Nette (2014 AFIRC Research Fellowship winner and crime writer) and Associate Professor Lisa French (RMIT University).
